

MAP 19.1

Economic Regions of the World

The global nature of the world economy at the turn of the twentieth century is indicated by three interlocking geographic regions. At the center was the industrial core—Western Europe and the northeastern United States; the agricultural rural periphery (rural domain) supplied immigrant laborers to the industries in the core. Beyond these regions lay a “third world” tied economically to the industrial core by colonialism.